INTELLIGENCE ON IRAN WEBSITE NOW ONLINE

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

CHEVY CHASE, MARYLAND — The American-Israeli Cooperative Enterprise announces the launch of IranIntelligence.com, a new website devoted to tracking the Iranian nuclear program and the international response to Tehran’s actions. The site is free to use, open-sourced and contains both expert analyses on the nuclear issues as well as a diverse archive of primary and secondary source material.

When it comes to the Iranian nuclear program, we are often faced with more questions than answers. How do we know Iran’s nuclear program is not peaceful? How advanced is the Iranian nuclear program? Why would Iran target Israel or the United States? Is it possible to deter a nuclear Iran?

The need for answers to these and other questions is increasingly urgent as Iran approaches the capability to produce nuclear weapons. In the coming months, we will face critical decisions about what can and should be done to prevent Iran from building a bomb. IranIntelligence.com offers easy access to the facts and background information on the critical issues that will influence those decisions.

“We hope IranIntelligence.com will help visitors understand why there is an international consensus to stop the Iranians from getting a nuclear bomb,” said AICE Executive Director Mitchell Bard. “This is the most important foreign policy issue of the day and everyone should be informed about the danger a nuclear Iran poses to its Arab neighbors, Israel, Europe and the United States, and what, if anything, can be done to eliminate this threat.”

IranIntelligence.com can also be found on social media through Facebook, Twitter, Google Plus and YouTube.

IranIntelligence.com is a project of the AMERICAN-ISRAELI COOPERATIVE ENTERPRISE (AICE), a 501(c)(3) nonprofit, nonpartisan organization established in 1993.
